Professional Background

Matt is a fully qualified learning disability nurse with a decade of experience working adults and paediatric clients with a wide range of complex conditions. Inspired by experiences shared with his severely disabled brother, he completed his training as a mature student with the mission of improving the lives of people with disabilities. In 2012, he won the Student Nurse of the Year Award for the learning disability branch.

Following his graduation from the University of York, Matt's experience was a health facilitation nurse. This involved improving the health outcomes of clients with learning disabilities via providing training and education to GPs and hospital staff. He then transferred to a specialist unit offering respite and end of life care to clients with learning disabilities and autism.

Following this, Matt joined a community learning disability team, leading the provision of education and healthcare services to around 60 young adults aged 16-21, many of whom had complex health or behavioural needs. This also included staff management and training. During this time, Matt also provided teaching to students on a diverse variety of personal, social and health-related matters, developing teaching plans to ensure robust delivery amidst limited resources. Matt has also obtained six months experience in disability assessment. He has been involved in an epilepsy steering group, advising on best practices, and has written and delivered training to peers and support staff.
